Although I am a heathen, yet I am neither such a savage nor cannibal at all. I have never heard that any of my predecessors or myself have ever killed, massacred, or brutally murdered any black or white foreigner or foreigners. We have here some foreigners in the midst of the Liberian settlement within our reach representing different civilised nations by their respective flags—viz., of the German nation, Messrs. Lehman and Woerman; of French, M. Verdire; of English, Messrs. Allen, Burton, and Hazeley, of Sierra Leone; of America or U.S., Revs. Mr. Davis and Fair. These persons we have never troubled in the present war. How could we single out and brutally murder Mr. Selim Aga, and leave the others as above mentioned unmolested? How could I venture to raise my puny arm against the British Government as to perpetrate, for the first time, such a black deed in murdering a British subject in defiance of the British by Dower, especially when I am at war with the Americo-Liberians? I deeply regret that my people have thus accidentally killed Mr. Sehm Aga in the midst and issue of the battle, which could not possibly be avoided. OUR CANAL POPULATION. TO THE EDITORS OF THE LEEDS MERCURY. GENTLEMEN,—In a leading article in the Standard a week or two since several difficulties were raised with week or two since several difficulties were raised with two of no less than 40lb, weight each—(more than reference to the statements made by me in "Our Canal double the usual size)—swinging them in all directions, to ' Population," concerning the separation of the women and children living and working on canal-boats. I think musical accompaniments, with a degree of procedulate you will agree with me that a boat cabin—not long training and great muscular development. Stanley oven big enough for a man to either stand up or lie oven my enough for a man to either stand up or no down in—is not the proper place for children to be born, reared, and educated—smallpox, fever, and death grappled with; but so it is. Some of the evils attending the poor women and children living in these cribs ing the poor women and children living in these cribs ing the poor women and children living in these cribs — for they are no better—might be lessened if the journeys were shorter, and always fine summer weather, and the children could gambol on the banks, but unfortunately for the poor creatures it is not so. There are damp, dirty boats, long journeys, wet days, winterly nights to contend with. If the children are to have any exercise it must be by trudging after the horse over "shoe tops" in mud. It has been said that the children get plenty of fresh air; for the life of me I cannot imagine the air to be pure on stinking (many of which are stagnant) waters and tilthy boats. The of which are stagnant) waters and filthy boats. The sickly appearance of the women and children, albeit, does not lead you to believe they enjoyed much fresh air or lived in the region of the region or lived in the region of pure water. The cabin, being in the rear, comes in contact with everything in the boat offensive, such as manure, refuse, &c. Laden boats very often disturb, during transit, all kinds of decayed animal and vegetable matter lying at the bottom to a fever-full extent. A fortnight ago a His Honour read judgment in this case. The judgment religious service was held in a "penny gaff" in had been written by the learned judge (Serjeant Tibia) London, in the neighbourhood of a canal. A laden Atkinson), who was unfortunately unable to attend to boat passed close by at the time, disturbing the mud was an issue remitted by the Court of Exchequer, at the bottom, causing a fearful stench. The result was in which the plaintiff, Joseph Rayner, a cab prethat eight persons had to leave the room during service prietor at Headingley, sought to recover from and did not return. What the last part of the congrega- the defendant, Joseph Mitchell, a brewer at tion had to endure may be imagined. The Government | Burmantofts, damages caused by the negligent driving prevents overcrowding in houses and on vessels. In of the defendant's servant on the 5th of March, Coventry no habitable room is allowed to be built 1875, by which the plaintiff's cab was broken and other. of less than 900 cubic feet of space. No berth on a wise injured. His Honour held that the injury done vessel for two persons is allowed to be less than eight by the servant to the plaintiff's cab was done, in feat high, six feet long, and three feet wide. In a boat the Judge's view of the facts, while he was engaged in cabin, little more than this size, we have father, his master's employment; and there must, therefore, is mother, and six or seven children all huddled together, judgment for the plaintiff for £12 13s. with costs, with living, sleeping, cooking, and washing. It cannot be leave to appeal. said that sailors and others not getting fresh air on the IMPORTANT RAILWAY CASE.—LITTLE v. THE MIDLES sea was the reason a law was passed prohibiting overcrowding in borths; and why boat cabins should be Tindal Atkinson's judgment in this case. The plaintif allowed to go "scot free" without any inspection or sought to recover £55s. as damages from the defendants for supervision on the plea that my young clients get plenty their unreasonably delaying him while on a journey in one of fresh air is a problem I cannot solve. Two men and a youth might sleep—I won't say comfortably—in a cabin: the men on the bed at the end, some 2ft. 10in. wide, and 5ft. 10in. long, and the youth on the side seat—say about 4ft. 10in. long, and 16in. wide. More than this number should not be allowed. This would leave for each person about 75 cubic feet of space—the same as is allowed by law on a ship. Another difficulty raised by some is that if the women and children are to live in a house on land. if the women and children are to live in a house on land, and that even if the train did not arrive in resonable if the women and children are to live in a house on land, the boaters will be from home several days together. This cannot be a difficulty if we look at other classes of the community. There are commercial travellers, sailors, labourers, artisans, and those who work fly-boats on the canals in Scotland and Ireland, and others who have to be from home for months together. It has been said that a boater does not get sufficient money to pay for the rent of a house. If this be so, by all means let him have it. Canal shares are up in the market. What is 2d. per ton more on a load of 30 tons for a journey of 100 miles, as compared with the health and well-being of this useful class of people? I was told the other day by a manager, who has the their trains shall both start and arrive at the stated times, charge of nearly twenty boats, that his employer during and this being so, I am called upon to say whether by the last twenty years has not allowed either woman or child to live or work on his boats, and the work has been done as cheaply as if the houter had taken his wife and reaching there at 7.45 instead of 3.23, and I can come to reaching there at 7.45 instead of 3.23, and I can come to six or seven little children with him. A boat should, properly speaking, be looked upon as his place of work, in
By the means of telegraphic communication from station the same light as a sailor regards his ship. A clergyman to station, the company's servants at Derby must have in Lincolnshire raises another objection; he writes to say known that the Manchester train could not arrive at the that it would not do for a boater to leave his woman appointed time, and that the detention of the Lee's behind him. Surely the boater can take care of himself, passengers at Derby would prevent their meeting the without being led about by the guiding strings of "his train by which they would, at Birmingham, proceed woman." Sailors' and commercial travellers' wives have to leave their husbands in the hands of a "crooked and company's time-tables. Even as it was, according to perverse generation," to get along as best they can. In conclusion, I would say that nearly the whole of the the Hereford through train been detached at Sailley "difficulties" and "objections" have come from out instead of being taken on to the Birmingham station, fr siders, those who have little or no interest in the canal minutes would have been saved, and the Hereford trans traffic, canal management, or canal shares.—Yours very caught. Upon these facts I am of opinion that their GEORGE SMITH. the decision of Hamlin v. the Great Northern Railway
